Which aspects of landscaping are important, which are essential, and which ones can you take or leave? One of our neighbors has great landscaping ideas and talents and is willing to share them with others. We live in a neighborhood where everyone takes pride in their yards. As a result there are many landscaping ideas that people use to enhance the look of their yard. He is an accountant so he spends many hours behind a desk each day. When he gets home he likes to spend as much time as possible outside. He has found that by helping his neighbors with landscaping ideas he can try out different projects without having all of them in his yard. He does not want to have so many projects in his space that it looks cluttered. One day I was working in our backyard trying to develop a new flower garden. To do this I needed to remove a small amount of sod. My neighbor, the accountant, saw me working and came over to see what landscaping ideas I had for the area. I explained that I was going to develop a rock garden with annuals to add some color to this area of the yard. He suggested putting in a small pond with a water fountain. I thought that this landscaping idea sounded a bit more involved than I wanted to get. I explained that I did not want to start a project that would take a great deal of time and maintenance. He told me that he had several gardening magazines that had landscaping ideas and water projects were easy to do. He offered to bring over the magazines for me to look through and also offered to help with the project. If you don't have accurate information about landscaping ideas, then you might make a bad choice on the subject. Don't let that happen: keep reading. After looking through the magazines I did get several good landscaping ideas for the area. One did include a small water feature. The area that I was concentrating on was close to the side of the house. There was a water spigot close that could be used in the water feature. I showed the design to my wife and she thought it was very attractive, but she was concerned about the amount of work it would take. I told her that our neighbor had offered to help. My wife knows that the accountant is a hard worker with good follow-through, so we decided to go with the landscaping ideas from the magazine. We bought the supplies listed in the magazine and started work on the project. We needed to dig a small hole for the water feature and line it with a heavy plastic to create a pond. We had several large rocks that we arranged at the top of the pond so that water could run down the rocks to pool in the pond area. We used spot lights to reflect off the water feature at night. Both the water feature and the lights were on timers to run for several hours each evening. Best of all, the way we set it up we do not have to remember to shut it off. There's a lot to understand about landscaping. The landscaping ideas we came up with added a beautiful restful spot in our backyard. Landscaping Ideas 4BestGardening.com
